10 years ago, we graduated from Franklin and Marshall. During our time at F&M, the world changed. Bill Clinton survived Monica Lewinsky and impeachment. He also appointed the first female Secretary of State, Madeline Albright. The US bombed Iraq and Kosovo, and Ireland finally found peace. Jon Benet Ramsey was murdered, Princess Diana died, and thousands protested the WTO in Seattle. Everyone felt the pain and horror of Columbine.

Everything wasn't serious and sad, science had some major breakthroughs. Cloning went from science fiction to reality, making Dolly the first ever celebrity sheep. In medicine, the all important Viagra was approved by the FDA. In pop culture, broke records, for box office sales and number of tears shed by teenage girls. "Show me the money!" became a catchphrase, and a little book called was published. Boy bands and Britney ruled the airways, something that people wish they could forget.

For many of us though, those four years were only about what happened at F&M. We attended lectures by John Major and Newt Gingrich, and performances by George Clinton, Billy Joel,0 1 03) 3(uuajoe
